

April 5, 2006

Please write your message here. Take note of the style tips and talking points in the sidebar. Wal-Mart scares me as it is. If they are allowed to also be a bank, I believe it would be a catastrophe. They already have most of the business in food shopping, clothing, etc. No one company should have the power of controlling all the money too. It would hurt the small business even more if they had to borrow their money from Wal-Mart. I shudder to think what that kind of power would do to the ordinary person, who probably would assume that they were getting the best deal on their money but aren't. It seems almost like the "company stores" of yesteryear, where you owed your soul to the company store. Please think long and hard about this.

Thank you.

Joanna Gradilone